PHYSICIAN FINDS EXTRA PASSENGER

Dr. Hawley has had occasion since Saturday night for two distinct lines of explanation in different quarters. One of these had to do with delayed arrival at a home from whence had come a hurry call of decided importance, the frank of the Stork being attached thereto. The other came about through having to explain why it was he kidnapped a five-year-old girl, to which original charge there was added alleged attempt at murder. Happily, in both cases the actual was the same in point of everybody alive and peace restored, the villain transformed to a hero and soba made over into joy. As the story runs, Dr. Hawley received his hurry call and made a quick dash up the street for his automobile, which happened to be reposing

TO DEDICATE PEACE PALACE

THE HAGUE, Aug. 22.—The busy Dutch capital is all astir in anticipation of the great ceremony here next week, when the Palace of Peace, the $1,500,000 gift of Andrew Carnegie to the nations of the world, is to be formally dedicated as the permanent home of the international court of arbitration. The event will bring to either representatives of all the civilized nations. In addition to the special envoys the attendance will include the delegates to the World's Peace Congress, which has been holding its sessions here this week, and many of the delegates to the approaching meeting of the Interparliamentary Union.

The notable participants in the dedication ceremonies will include Queen Wilhelmina and the Prince Consort and Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Carnegie. The many judges of the international arbitration court, the foreign diplomats resident in The Hague and all the prominent officials of the government of The Netherlands will take part.

The president of the Carnegie Foundation, M. von Karnebeck, will make a speech in French formally transferring the palace to the international court, and the Minister of Foreign Affairs will make a brief speech of acceptance. At the conclusion of the ceremonies the hundreds of guests will make a tour of inspection of the building and its grounds.

Those who have already been privileged to inspect the palace pronounce it an edifice of unusual beauty and magnificence. It occupies a commanding site on the broad avenue connecting The Hague with the popular seaside resort of Scheveningen. The grounds comprise sixteen acres, which once were the garden of the palace belonging to the late Princess Anna Paulowna, the grandmother of Queen Wilhelmina.

The plans for the palace were drawn by M. L. M. Cordonnier, a celebrated French architect. The design of the exterior is pure Dutch. The building is 250 feet square and is constructed of brick and stone. In front is a broad terrace and in the rear is a magnificent grove of trees. The main entrance is approached by an inclined plane instead of a flight of steps. At one corner of the building is an imposing clock tower 250 feet high.

The main floor is to be given over entirely to courtrooms and consultation rooms. The great court, in which the meetings of the international permanent court of arbitration and similar conferences are to be held, is a splendid apartment of a monumental character. It is reached through a wide corridor lined with green and Italian marble. On one side of the chamber is a platform and bench for the tribunal. For a space of thirty feet in front of it, protected by a balustrade of carved mahogany, are tables for lawyers, and back of them the remainder of the room and the several galleries may be occupied by delegates or visitors.

In the corner of the main floor, at the base of the tower, is a smaller courtroom which is to be used for ordinary arbitrations, which are usually conducted without spectators. Connected with the small courtroom are reading rooms, consultation rooms, a reference library and other conveniences. The basement will contain the offices of the secretary and staff of the permanent organization, a room for newspaper correspondents, a telephone office, a large restaurant and the heating and lighting plants. The upper floor of the building, which is reached by a monumental stairway, contains the rooms of the administrative council and other officials of the permanent court, and several rooms which may be used as offices of the court in arbitration cases.

At the time of the laying of the cornerstone of the Palace of Peace, in 1907, a resolution was passed inviting the forty-six nations which signed the treaty for the permanent court to contribute material and objects of art for the decoration of the edifice. Many of them responded in a generous manner. The government of the United States contributed a large marble group of statuary representing in allegory the purpose of the building. Brazil furnished the mahogany for finishing the great court and Mexico contributed the onyx for the monumental stairway. Great Britain gave four magnificent stained-glass windows which are to afford light to the great court. Sweden gave the granite for the basement. Germany the monumental gates at the entrance of the building. The gift of France consists of a set of priceless Gobelin tapestries with which the smaller courtroom and one or more of the consultation rooms will be hung.

ing in a garage. The manager of the latter a little earlier in the evening enjoyed a call from his wife and little daughter. The latter became sleepy and was placed in the rear seat of an automobile where she dropped off into sound slumber. The machine happened to be that of the doctor. He had the terrible wide open down Naco road when a series of heavy infantile yells caused him to stop on the brakes. First impression being that he had run over some one. Then he found the little girl on the floor of the tonneau, where she had jolted from the seat and then jolted some more. Of course he had to stop. It took him to the garage, and do it quick. Expectation that trouble awaited his return was correct. Distracted parents were hunting a kidnaper. He made part of his explanation and promised the rest. And at Johnson's addition he explained some more along another line: Also registered a promise with himself to in future prove around a bit in his machine before starting out,
